

Partial Function Application

- Partial function application uses a function (generator) that creates a new function (applicator) to call a third function (primary) that the generator receives as an argument.
- The generator receives some of the primary's arguments, while the applicator receives the rest when it gets invoked
- The applicator then calls the primary and passes it all its arguments, both those passed to the generator and those passed to the applicator